Old Wine in New Bottles—Nursing in the 21st Century

ROGER J. BULGER, MD*

This article is based on the John P. McGinnis Award Lecture presented at the American Association of Colleges of Nursing's annual meeting on October 22, 1995.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO, on a commemorative occasion for the Boston University School of Nursing, John Silber (1911), the University's president, provided me the rationale for the title of this essay, when he said,

...basis of what they do, so fundamentals and foundational principles, rebuilding on them step-by-step a new construction better fitted to the problems of the times and the environments. That is the sort of thing I would like to try to do in this essay, asking the reader's indulgence and understanding that I appreciate only too well the sartorial inadequacy of an outsider, no matter how friendly, being able to speak confidently about someone else's profession. With that caveat, I shall attempt to go back to some basic considerations
